MAIL TRUCK STUCK IN MUD
Jinney Service Carries Passengers To and From Main Line Tracks

With the mail truck stuck in the mud near Millers on its way up with the mails from train No. 24, there is no telling when letters and newspapers will be ready for delivery at the Tonopah office. It was supposed that the new emergency service would run smoothly today, but the officials did not count on the coming of the second storm which piled up mountains of mud all over the section lying west of town. Yesterday George Ryan, who went after the mail, said it took two and a half hours to make 100 yards at one place on the road, but otherwise the going was fair.

Train service will be disrupted for several days, according to reports, as it is impossible to use the tracks between here and Main line, near Millers, where the damage was greatest. The bridge is 100 feet in the air, held up by the steel. The flood rained against the roadbed when it could not pass under the tracks and gradually rose over the tracks, which were undermined and washed until a gap 50 feet wide was opened for passage of the water.

Service to Goldfield was restored yesterday afternoon, when No. 24 of Tuesday went through in the south end camp, leaving the Tonopah passengers at Millers, where they remained until 9:30. At that time messages to Tonopah brought relief in the shape of a dozen cars which took the marooned Tonopah people and brought them around by the Millers cut-off to the Goldfield road and then into town via the Divide, arriving here at 11:30 last night. The break on the main line between Main line and McSweeney's siding was repaired yesterday and a stalled freight train sent through, after which No. 24 was sent on to Goldfield and No. 23 dispatched from that point. By tomorrow it is believed the road will be in shape to have trains run into Tonopah, routing them along the main line to McSweeney's and then up the southern way, returning by the same circuitous course.

The branch office is established at the suggestion of Mr. Glass for the purpose of accommodating the greatest number of voters.

MAROONED ON THE WAY HOME

R. E. Savage, chief engineer of the local division of the state highway construction force, had an experience Monday night that he does not care to repeat. He was driving with his wife and baby, returning from a vacation on the coast and was making excellent time with the pleasant prospect of reaching home by 11 o'clock. The road was smooth and dry, the air was balmy and the young couple were enjoying the ride while both watched the flashes that lighted the sky over Tonopah. However, there was no indication of serious trouble until reaching a small wash. Mr. Savage encountered an angry looking torrent that was just making its way over the road. With out any hesitation Mr. Savage drove his car into the water, where he halted and remained for the night, with the expectation of seeing the landscape covered in a few minutes to a depth of several feet. The party remained stationary until 4:30 in the morning, when the big highway truck with a crew arrived and rescued the party.

MAKES NEW TIME SAN FRANCISCO

Grant Crumley holds the record for an auto trip between here and San Francisco and return. He came in yesterday before the road became impassable in the vicinity of Millers and went to bed for a rest, as the journey was a continuous ride from start to finish. Leaving San Francisco at 2:30 Monday afternoon the big Cadillac rolled into the owners' garage at 11:40 Tuesday morning. Mr. Crumley admits that he did some hard driving, and points with pride to his tires, which show the effects of the grinding pace he set, as they are jagged and worn to the fair. The roads were found in good condition except in the distance between here and Mina, which is said to be filled with chuckholes that could be filled at slight expense. In return for Mr. Crumley turned off at the foot of Placerville summit and ran over Woodford's pass via Gardnerville. There was no intention of going to Gardnerville, but Crumley lost his way, and thought he was coming out somewhere near Wellington. The time noted includes time lost in fixing tires and time wasted in getting on the wrong trail. The distance is over 300 miles, which is going some for a straight one-day drive.

Water Seventeen Feet Deep On the West Side of Mt. Brougher

CAMP ESCAPES A CALAMITY

Nothing Could Have Withstood the Shock if Water Had Reached Tonopah

Tonopah is in position today to extend congratulations to itself on escaping so easily from the storm of Monday night. From all accounts it appears that this city was on the edge of a calamity which swept down west of Brougher mountain with such velocity that the whole district leading down to Millers is gashed and torn as though an earth quake had shattered the landscape. Had the volume of water been directed toward the city, Millers street would have been devastated.

After the first visitation the storm passed off down by Millers where it encountered another storm from the west and was blown back toward Tonopah. The wind shifted slightly so that the worst effects were felt west of Mount Brougher where the water in places reached a depth of 17 or 18 feet. Terrible landslides in the forest desert and sweeping over the railroad tracks which barred the flow.

Still another storm of cyclonic force was for hours threatening Tonopah, coming from the direction of Brougher mountain and heading for Tonopah. The upper end of the mountain acted as a windmill, and the wind whirled about the mountain and over the railroad tracks which barred the flow.
